Title of the program: Induction programme to FYUGP students

Date: 01/08/2023

Background/ Significance of the event

The transition to college can be challenging, and some students may feel anxious or overwhelmed. An induction program can help alleviate these feelings by providing information, support, and encouragement, helping students feel more confident as they begin their academic journey. First semester students may not be accustomed to the academic rigor of college-level coursework. An induction program can provide guidance on study skills, time management, and academic expectations, helping students transition smoothly into their new academic environment. Many first-year students are new to the institution, and an induction program helps familiarize them with the campus layout, facilities, and resources available to them. This can include tours of the campus, introductions to key staff members, and explanations of campus policies and procedures. Starting college can be intimidating for many students, especially if they are away from home for the first time. Induction programs often include social activities and icebreaker sessions designed to help students meet their peers and build a sense of community.
